Nowadays, People are able to speak using more than one language. In the daily life, we often see and hear somebody speaks using a language at one time and speaks using the other language at another time and place. The writer choose the works of B. J Habibie to be analyzed because he is the perfect figure for the bilingualism, he and his family also interact with more than one language. Since Habibie's family live in German and Indonesia, they often used code mixing in their daily life.

After analyzing all of the data, the thesis writer found that the types of code-mixing used in the source of data are inserting word, phrase, hybrid, and idiom.
