

CHAPTER 4

CONCLUSION

There are two main topics that have been discussed in this study. First is about Albus experience, the experience is divided into three subtopics; they are his experience as a son of Harry, his experience as a student at Hogwarts and his experiences with his friends. Second is about the influence of Albus' experience to his character. The influence makes the change of Albus character. Those two main topics are related to the statement of problems.

Being a Harry Potter's son is uneasy matter because Albus carries the name of his most influential father in the Hogwarts surroundings. Since the first time Albus is at Hogwarts, people always expect if Albus will be like his great father. Unfortunately, Albus does not inherit his father's traits, so the difference between father and son are clearly visible. That causes people become disappointed with Albus so Albus does not want to always be compared with his father.

In academic terms, Albus is not even brilliant. Starting from the first time he gets a lesson at school about brooms, he cannot even do well. It is the same as using spells and concocting potions. When making a concoction to heal, he is entering the entirely wrong material and makes an exploding concoction. It is also very different from his father who is very bright in school so that people are increasingly underestimating Albus.

Albus is a very trusting child to others, as well as in friendship. He is not picky in friendship and it is proven from the beginning of the story when he first meets Scorpius. Although Rose tells him to stay away from Scorpius because according to rumor he is the son of evil death eater, Albus still wants to be friends with Scorpius. They also spend a lot of time together in school as friends.

Abus also meets up with Delphi and makes her as his close friend too. At first it was not a problem to be friends with her, but all turns into a mess when Albus and Scorpius want to destroy Time-Turner. Delphi becomes a traitor and makes them to get stuck in the past. Certainly Albus' friendship is also very different from Harry's friendship, where Harry's friendship has never been betrayed even until they are grown and married. Their friendship remains intact and solid, helps each other and has no lies.

From the experience Albus has passed through, it has had an impact on him. Albus' nature has changed dynamically. Albus who initially is very affectionate to his family then turned into hating his family, especially against his father because he is always compared to his father. Even to his cousin, he also hates her till he never acknowledges her as a friend. However, in spite of its good nature has turned bad, in the end he can still be conscious after going through many events in the past that made him learn a lot to face reality and problems. As when he was trapped in the past, he cleverly used an old blanket to send a message to the future so he can be
