

ABSTRACT

This research has a focus of research that describes and reveals the process of decision making by students to college while working. This research is a qualitative research, using triangulation as data validation. The subject of the research is a student of Sunan Ampel State Islamic University who works. This research found some findings, namely Informant 1 or NA experiencing the following stages: Assessing problems, Looking for alternative options, Making commitments, Preparing for feedback. The next finding in this research is that the informant 2 or ZA experience the following stages: Assessing the problem, Looking for alternative choice, Considering alternative choice, Making commitment, Preparing for feedback. The next finding in this research is that Informant 3 or RN experience the following stages Assessing problems, Looking for alternative options, Making commitments, Preparing for feedback. This is in accordance with the proposed by Janis and Mann (1977) In making decisions, the process is sometimes not always sequential. There are also non-consecutive decision-making. Sometimes individuals make decisions with a fast process. In this case, it can pass one or two stages at a time.
