UNDERSTANDING AWARENESS IDENTITY TO BECOME A WHOLE

HUMAN IN ENDGAME SAMUEL BECKETT'S PLAYS

A THESIS

Submitted as a Partial Fulfillment of the Requirements for the Sarjana Degree of English Department Faculty of Arts and Humanities State Islamic University of Sunan Ampel Surabaya

By:

ABDURRAHMAN

Reg. Number: A03211002

ENGLISH DEPARTMENT

FACULTY OF ARTS AND HUMANITIES

STATE ISLAMIC UNIVERSITY SUNAN AMPEL SURABAYA

2018

DECLARATION

This thesis entitled "Understanding Awareness Identity to Become a Whole Human in Endgame Samuel Beckett's Plays" contains materials which have been accepted for the award of Sarjana degree of English Department Faculty of Arts and Humanities State Islamic University of Sunan Ampel Surabaya. This thesis contains no material previously published or written by other person except where due reference is made in the text of the thesis.

Surabaya, July 2017

Abdurrahman

50AEF757581874

A03211002

APPROVAL SHEET

Approved to be examined at:

Surabaya, July 2017

Approved by

The advisor

Dr. Mohammad Kurjum, M. Ag.

NIP. 196909251994031002

Acknowledged by

The head of English Department

Dr. Mohammad Kurjum, M. Ag.

NIP. 196909251994031002

ENGLISH DEPARTMENT

FACULTY OF ARTS AND HUMANITIES

STATE ISLAMIC UNIVERSITY SUNAN AMPEL SURABAYA

2018

EXAMINER APPROVAL

This thesis has been approved by the Board Examiners, English Department, Faculty of Arts and Humanities, UIN Sunan Ampel Surabaya on August 2017

The Dean of Paculty of Arts and Humanities

Dr. H. Imam Ghazali, M. A.

NIP: 196002121990031002

The Board of Examiners are:

Head of Examiners,

Dr. Mohammad Kurjum, M. Ag.

NIP. 196909251994031002

Examiners I,

Sufi Ikrima Sa'adah, M.Hum

NIP: 201603318

Secretary,

Abu Fanani, M. Pd

NIP: 196906152007011051

Examiners II,

Abdulloh Ubet, M.Ag

NIP: 196605071997031003

KEMENTERIAN AGAMA UNIVERSITAS ISLAM NEGERI SUNAN AMPEL SURABAYA PERPUSTAKAAN

Jl. Jend. A. Yani 117 Surabaya 60237 Telp. 031-8431972 Fax.031-8413300 E-Mail: perpus@uinsby.ac.id

LEMBAR PERNYATAAN PERSETUJUAN PUBLIKASI KARYA ILMIAH UNTUK KEPENTINGAN AKADEMIS

Sebagai sivitas akademika UIN Sunan Ampel Surabaya, yang bertanda tangan di bawah ini, saya: : Absurrahman Nama : A 03211002 NIM : Adab dam Humaniona / Southa Inganis Fakultas/Jurusan E-mail address Cumadude @ gneil. Com Demi pengembangan ilmu pengetahuan, menyetujui untuk memberikan kepada Perpustakaan UIN Sunan Ampel Surabaya, Hak Bebas Royalti Non-Eksklusif atas karya ilmiah: Sekripsi ☐ Tesis ☐ Desertasi ☐ Lain-lain (.....) yang berjudul: UNDERSTANDING AWARENESS IDENTITY TO BECOME A WHOLE HUMAN IN ENDEAME SAMUEL BECKETT'S beserta perangkat yang diperlukan (bila ada). Dengan Hak Bebas Royalti Non-Ekslusif ini Perpustakaan UIN Sunan Ampel Surabaya berhak menyimpan, mengalih-media/format-kan, mengelolanya dalam bentuk pangkalan data (database), mendistribusikannya, dan menampilkan/mempublikasikannya di Internet atau media lain secara fulltext untuk kepentingan akademis tanpa perlu meminta ijin dari saya selama tetap mencantumkan nama saya sebagai penulis/pencipta dan atau penerbit yang bersangkutan. Saya bersedia untuk menanggung secara pribadi, tanpa melibatkan pihak Perpustakaan UIN Sunan Ampel Surabaya, segala bentuk tuntutan hukum yang timbul atas pelanggaran Hak Cipta dalam karya ilmiah saya ini. Demikian pernyataan ini yang saya buat dengan sebenarnya. Surabaya, 14 Pebrucia 2018 Penulis

> Abdurahman nama terang dan tanda tangan

TABLE CONTENTS

Inside Cover Page	i
Declaration Page	ii
Advisor's Approval Page	iii
Examiner's Approval Page	iv
Publication Sheet	v
Table of Contents	vi
Abstract
Intisari	ix
CHAPTER I INTRODUCTION	1
1.1 Background of Study	1
1.2 Statement of Problem	9
1.3 Objective of the Study	9
1.4 Significance of the Study
1.5 Scope and Limitation	10
1.6 Method of the Study	10
1.6.1 Research Design	10
1.6.2 Source of Data	11
1.6.3 Data Collection	11
1.6.4 Data Analysis	11
1.7 Definition of Key Term	12
CHAPTER II REVIEW OF RELATED LITERATURE	13
2.1 Theoretical Framework	13
2.1.1 Jean Paul Sartre Existensialism Theory	13
2.1.2 Jacques Lacan Psychoanalysis Theory	18
2.1.2.1 Lacan and Personality Development	20
2.1.2.2 The Fundamental Fantasy	20
2.1.2.3 Lacanian Psychoanalytic Methodology	21
2.1.2.4 From Desire to Drive	22
2.1.3 Society in the Individual	23

2.1.4 Personality and Social Crisis	26
2.2 Review of Related Study	28
CHAPTER III ANALYSIS	31
3.1 The Absurdity as Self-Discovery by Hamm in Endgame	31
3.1.1 Jean Paul-Sartre Existentialism	32
3.1.2 Jacques Lacan Psychoanalysis	40
3.1.2.1 Lacan and Personality Development	40
3.1.2.2 Fundamental Fantasy	45
3.1.2.3 From Desire to Drive	49
3.1.3 Society in the Individual	52
3.1.4 Personality and Social Crisis	54
3.2 Important awareness as subject by Hamm in Samuel Beckett's	Endgame
playplay	57
3.2.1 Jean Paul-Sartre Existentialism	57
3.2.2 Jacques Lacan Psychoanalysis	59
3.2.2.1 Identity, or the Subject-as-Meaning	61
3.2.3 Social in the Individual
3.2.4 Personality and Social Crisis	64
CHAPTER IV CONCLUSION
REFERENCES	70

ABSTRACT

Rahman, Abdur. 2017. Understanding Awareness Identity to become a whole Human in Endgame Samuel Beckett's plays. English Literature, Faculty of Letters and Humanities, State Islamic University of Sunan Ampel Surabaya. Thesis Advisor: Dr. Mohammad Kurjum, M. Ag

This thesis tries to analyze the drama script from Samuel Beckett entitled Endgame. This drama tells of an isolated Hamm in his own home with a saturating activity with his Clov aides and his parents Nagg and Nell, so they are trying to bring the side of the reality of life to be peeled.

This thesis focuses on the analysis of Hamm's consciousness of all past and present events. The purpose of this thesis is to describe the absurdity of life of the main character and to reveal the meaning behind it all in the absurdity drama script. Faced with the focus of the above study, this study using the theory of existentialism as the basic data to bring to the analysis further which uses psychoanalysis theory to illustrate subject condition of the main character, and it is also supported by the theory of society in the individual. For the latter, the main point of the study. This will be directed to the theory of personality and social crises that reveal that everyone has shortcomings and are interdependent with each other and of course always influenced by the environment.

Furthermore, this thesis tries to reflect some points with the value of humanity to have personal's awareness identity. Exactly, it could be forming the personal's capacity building to become better person and have integrity. The other important value is self-discovery interpreted will needed in human being as the effort to get understanding meaningfully life.

Keywords: Humanity, Absurdity, Awareness.

INTISARI

Rahman, Abdur. 2017. Understanding Awareness Identity to become a whole Human in Endgame Samuel Beckett's plays. Sastra Inggris, Fakultas Sastra dan Humaniora, UIN Sunan Ampel Surabaya.

Dosen pembimbing skripsi: Dr. Mohammad Kurjum, M.Ag

Skripsi ini mencoba untuk menganalisa naskah drama dari Samuel Beckett yang berjudul Endgame. Drama ini menceritakan tentang Hamm yang terisolasi di dalam rumahnya sendiri dengan aktifitas yang menjenuhkan beserta Clov pembantunya dan orangtuanya Nagg dan Nell, sehingga mereka berusaha menghadirkan peristiwa realitas kehidupan yang diciptakan oleh penulisnya.

Skripsi ini fokus pada analisa kesadaran identitas diri Hamm atas semua peristiwa yang sudah lalu dan yang sedang dialami. Tujuan dari skripsi ini diantaranya untuk menggambarkan absurditas pencarian diri dari karakter utama dan untuk mengungkap upaya pemaknaan dibalik itu semua di dalam naskah drama. Berhadapan dengan fokus dari kajian di atas, kajian ini menggunakan teori eksistensialisme sebagai data utama untuk membawa ke analisa lebih lanjut yang menggunakan teori psikoanalisa untuk menggambarkan kondisi subjek dari karakter utama, dan hal tersebut juga didukung oleh teori masyarakat di perorangan dan yang terakhir dari kajian ini akan diarahkan ke teori kepribadian dan krisis sosial yang mengungkap bahwa setiap orang memiliki kekurangan dan saling bergantung satu sama lain dan tentunya selalu dipengaruhi oleh lingkungannya.

Selanjutnya, skripsi ini mencoba untuk mencerminkan beberapa poin dengan nilai kemanusiaan untuk memiliki kesadaran identitas personal. Lebih tepatnya, itu dapat membentuk pembangunan kapasitas seseorang agar menjadi manusia yang lebih baik dan mempunyai integritas. Dan nilai penting lainnya yakni pemaknaan atas pencarian diri akan dibutuhkan didalam keberadaan manusia itu sendiri sebagai upaya untuk memahami kehidupan yang bermakna.

Kata Kunci: Kemanusiaan, Absurditas, Kesadaran

CHAPTER 1

INTRODUCTION

1.1 Background of Study

Literature is shadowing or imaginative depiction of life and mind into the forms and structures of language (Tarigan 3). It is also a creative activity, a work of art (Wellek and Warren 3). In other words, the world of literature is the fantasy world, the world is happening because the imagination of author (17). Activities of an author (in literature), especially who has become proficient author, giving a variety of values. Value is something that arising from the actions, thoughts, and article of one's actions. So, what mentioned in a literary work could provide experience or inspiration for readers (Gie 1).

To understand the values in the literature, it requires a literary criticism. As Wellek and Warren said that every work of art is existing now, is directly accessible to observation, and is a solution of certain artistic problems whether it was composed yesterday or a thousand years ago. It cannot be analyzed, characterized, or evaluated without a constant recourse to literary critical principles (36). Literary criticism is the discipline of interpreting, analyzing, and evaluating work of literature (Gillespie 1).

Absurdity is a thing that is extremely unreasonable, so as to be foolish or not taken seriously, or the state of being so. "Absurd" is an adjective used to describe an absurdity, e.g., "this encyclopedia article is absurd (1). It derives from the Latin absurdum meaning "out of tune", hence irrational. The Latin surdus means "deaf", implying stupidity. Absurdity is contrasted with seriousness in reasoning. In general usage, absurdity may be synonymous with ridiculousness and nonsense. In specialized usage, absurdity is related to extremes in bad reasoning or pointlessness in reasoning; ridiculousness is related to extremes of incongruous juxtaposition, laughter, and ridicule; and nonsense is related to a lack of meaningfulness.

Psychology is endlessly fascinating science of human mind and behavior, and it can be rewarding tool for enhancing our understanding and appreciation of literature and of ourselves (43). It is not just about understanding psychological issues of others-whether literary characters or authors or a whole story. It needs to understand or analyze many stories that have hidden motivation and makes it clear. In literary work sometimes we find characters live in their desires, anxieties, and dreams that influence characters behavior. As Freud said that the writers work out their secret desires and anxieties in fictional form. Thus, character's issues are actually writer's issues displaced in the story (44). There are many desires that do by some characters in literary work. One of them is desire to sacrifice instead of helping others.

There are four characters that experience complicated situation in this family. Hamm is a man, about fifty years old, and as son of Nagg. He is one of persons in his family that have physical disability, such as blind and unable to stand. Clov is servant of Hamm, unable to sit. Nagg is Hamm's father, has no legs and lives in a dustbin. And Nell is Hamm's mother, has no legs and lives in a dustbin next to Nagg. The main character, Hamm, behaves badly, in a manner seemingly guaranteed to ensure that no audience member would like him or care about what happened to him. He succeeds. At the end, he is alone in an apparently depopulated world, his parents Nell and Nagg dead on stage in their garbage bins, and abandoned by his long-suffering. The play was premiered on 3 April 1957 at the Royal Court Theatre, London, directed by Roger Blin, who also played Hamm; Jean Martin was Clov, Georges Adet was Nagg and Christine Tsingos was Nell. In the early 1960s, an English language production produced by Philippe Staib and, directed by Beckett himself with Patrick MacGee and Jack MacGowran was staged at the Studio des Champs-Elysees, Paris. Other early productions were those at the Cherry Lane Theatre, New York, 28 January 1958, directed by Alan Schneider with Lester Rawlins as Hamm and Alvin Epstein together with Gerald Hiken playing Clov; and at the Royal Court directed by George Devine who also played Hamm, with Jack MacGowran as Clov. In 1984, JoAnne Akalaitis directed the play at the American Repertory Theatre in Cambridge, Massachusetts. The production featured music from Philip Glass and was set in a derelict subway tunnel. Grove Press, the owner of Beckett's work, took legal action against the theatre. The issue was settled out of court through the agreement of an insert into the program, part of which was written by Beckett himself.

In 2015, two of Australia's major state theatre companies will stage the play. For Sydney Theatre Company, Andrew Upton will direct the production, featuring Hugo Weaving as Hamm and for Melbourne Theatre Company, Colin Friels will star in a production directed by Sam Strong and designed by visual artist Callum Morton.

. By choosing Beckett's Endgame plays then interpretation and get understand in our life is more complicated like game, so many problem and unexplained things that can learn by human awareness. Because there is still few number of thesis which analyze this plays. Most of people only know Beckett's masterpiece such as Waiting for godot, which was a best plays and hit reading. So, this thesis hopefully is able to give new color among the number of thesis especially from Beckett's works.

The other interesting part in the story is how the characters of Endgame take special education as Hamm and clov talk about hustle and bustle symbols of life. He decided stay on the stage to continuing his role although his parents are dead behind him. Since he was knew all about problem of his life that realize how absurd human to understand the creator give many sign, symbol, and key to solve human role puzzle. Besides, Beckett also wrote how Hamm makes conversation with clov about life. Hamm was showed his way to refuse old tough by disagree with his parent on dustbin. It was showed by symbol of old man is useless when they were just silent and waiting for dead.

Theatre of the absurd is correctly beginning from existentialism doctrine or human nature and being from behavior to choosing freely and freedom, also having responsibility to the choosing. Basic theme of absurd's acts as existentialism itself is metaphysical anguish from the world's absurdity and human's life absurdity. The absurdist are apart from the reform movement and development of theatre conventions which is generally not easy to understood and define. The form of absurd's writing plays tends to undermine all existing conventions before then become a new convention. If the good plays (conventional) have a good plot's structure and clear, then in the absurd story there is no story or plot that can be explained.

If a good play can be judged by the presence of a clear and recognizable figure as a mechanical puppets of his day, in addition to having a whole theme that can be explained and disclosed neatly with complete solutions then absurd plays do not need to have a beginning and end. if a good play is present as a natural mirror and a portrait of the ordinance of an era as a slick sketch, the absurd story is a reflection of a terrible dream and a nightmare, if a good play rests on a sharp dialogue and answers to the answer then it is not so with the absurd play that often contains non-disconnecting babbles. Theatre of the absurd nevertheless emerges as a reflection of the most true attitude that represents the age itself, it tends to put forward the devaluation of language by carrying concrete poetry and the objective image of the stage itself. Thus, the language element remains an essential part of the absurd conception of the play, wherein (conventional) language is hollow meaning.

Endgame is the play is delivered using first-person point of view which Hamm appears as the writer who write all the events in the play. Only one round plays which shows the work of a mechanism until it stops and Endgame is the same as Waiting for Godot, grouping its character figures in symmetrical pairs. Endgame certainly not designed as an allegory that is maintained continuously, but there is no indication that there is an element of monodrama in the text.

Beckett's plays can be interpreted in various layers of meaning, the endgame is a monodrama in one layer of meaning and a script of the morality of death of a rich man and other layers of meaning. Hamm and Clov are linked by a mutually beneficial relationship of mutual dependence, wanting to abandon each other, fight each other, but remain dependent on one another. This is a situation that often occurs between couples, but it is also a picture of the connection of elements of the personality especially if the personality is experiencing a fight with himself.

He is the one who tells to the readers or audience about what he does. He only tells anything that correlate with his life. Despite of that, Clov can be called as the main character since she often appears although he does not dominate the whole play. As Nurgiyantoro said that the main character in the play may be more than one person, although its superiority level is not the same. Their superiority are determined by dominance, mostly appearance, and influence toward the whole development in the play (177).

Meanwhile, the "Theatre of the Absurd" is a term coined by Hungarian-born critic Martin Esslin, who made it the title of his 1962 book on the subject. The term refers to a particular type of play which first became popular during the 1950s and 1960s and which presented on stage the philosophy articulated by French philosopher Albert Camus in his 1942 essay, The Myth of Sisyphus, in which he defines the human condition as basically meaningless. Camus argued that humanity had to resign itself to recognizing that a fully satisfying rational explanation of the universe was beyond its reach; in that sense, the world must ultimately be seen as absurd.

Esslin regarded the term "Theatre of the Absurd" merely as a "device" by which he meant to bring attention to certain fundamental traits discernible in the works of a range of playwrights. The playwrights loosely grouped under the label of the absurd attempt to convey their sense of bewilderment, anxiety, and wonder in the face of an inexplicable universe. According to Esslin, the five defining playwrights of the movement are Eugène Ionesco, Samuel Beckett, Jean Genet, Arthur Adamov, and Harold Pinter, although these writers were not always comfortable with the label and sometimes preferred to use terms such as "Anti-Theater" or "New Theater".

Hamm's statement is described nature as a symbol of social conditions that careless about his/subject's life. Hamm, his servant Clov, and his parents Nell and Nagg all stay in the room, each with their own weaknesses, causing them to be dependent on one another. Nell and Nagg are both legless and live in two trash cans alongside one another. Hamm is blind and immobilized, but he controls access to the cupboard containing food necessary for survival. Clov moves Hamm around the room and completes simple tasks such as opening the curtains to view the nothingness outside and fetching Hamm's stuffed dog. Throughout the play Hamm engages his servant in mind games meant to distract him from his terror of dying. This opposite character is the source of the endless quarrels between them and often leads to the possibility of separation, however, because of their complementary nature, they also depend on each other and must always be together.

The "Theatre of the Absurd" shows the world as an incomprehensible place. The spectators see the happenings on the stage entirely from the outside, without ever understanding the full meaning of these strange patterns of events, as newly arrived visitors might watch life in a country of which they have not yet mastered the language. The confrontation of the audience with characters and happenings which they are not quite able to comprehend makes it impossible for them to share the aspirations and emotions depicted in the play.

The dialogs between Neell and Nagg are very verbal communicative language, when the reader or audience can understanding as verbal language. But in these dialogs describe nothing about the conflict in the playwright. It just a part of meaningless in our life, sometimes human are likely subject without meaning when they were do their daily activities, their hope, and their sacrifice is unavoidable in each their role. Human always expected about the happiness and success will happen to them, in the substantial meaning of life will faced to confusion and suffering.

Emotional identification with the characters is replaced by a puzzled, critical attention. For while the happenings on the stage are absurd, they yet remain recognizable as somehow related to real life with its absurdity, so that eventually the spectators are brought face to face with the irrational side of their existence. Thus, the absurd and fantastic goings-on of the Theatre of the Absurd will, in the end, be found to reveal the irrationality of the human condition and the illusion of what we thought was its apparent logical structure. If the work of beckett seeks to express the difficulty of seeking meaning in a world that tends to undergo incessant change, then the use of its language proves the limitations of the limitations of language, both as a means of communication and as the expression of a statement of valid statements of an instrument of thought.

1.2 Statement of Problem

Based on the background of the study above, the problems will be formulated as follows:

- 1.2.1 What is the absurdity as self-discovery by Hamm in Endgame Samuel Beckett's plays?
- 1.2.2 How is the important Hamm's awareness as subject as meaning or identity?

1.3 Objective of Study

Dealing with the statement of problems above, this study has an objective of finding out:

- 1.3.1 To identify the absurdity as self-discovery of Hamm in Endgame Samuel Beckett's Plays.
- 1.3.2 To know the Hamm's awareness as subject as meaning or identity.

1.4 Significance of Study

By analyzing the plays Endgame, this study would like to discuss of behaviors towards other people. Through the main character's way to show his expression by using psychoanalytic theory, it is expected the reader can get a further understanding about human's mind and behavior trough Hamm's life.

Hopefully, this research will be very useful in helping readers, especially for the youth, to be understood about the meaning of live. At last, this study can be considered as a contribution to the literary study especially for students in English Department Faculty of Letters and Humanities State Islamic University of Sunan Ampel Surabaya.

1.5 Scope and Limitation

This study focuses on the character of Hamm, the main character in Samuel Beckett's Endgame. This study will analyzes her character by observing her background, thought, behavior, and also the other character's thought about him. The limitation of the study is Hamm's awareness to an absurdity and the effect of it based on psychoanalysis point of view within the playwright and not outside that context of study. Therefore, this study will only be concentrating on finding awareness that is portrayed and the effect that he has experienced in the story.

1.6 Method of the Study

This chapter discusses how the research is conducted. It involves four main sub chapters consisting of research design, source of data, procedure of data collection, and procedure of data analysis.

1.6.1 Research Design

This study will use descriptive qualitative method. Qualitative research is a scientific activity of a number of procedures that can be used to solve the problem in accordance with the viewpoint and approach used by researchers (Aminuddin 1). Qualitative research as a type of research that is more emphasis on efforts to produce data, in-depth understanding, as well as the conception of meaning of a phenomenon can be applied in various fields of social sciences concerned with humanity (5). This study uses descriptive method. Surakhmad states that descriptive method is kind of research method using a technique of searching, collecting, classifying, analyzing the data, interpreting them and finally drawing conclusion (147).

1.6.2 Source of Data

The source of data in this research is come from the text of the plays with the tittle Endgame that was written by Samuel Beckett. The data will be taken by quoting the important sentences in the playwright and also related to problem of the study.

1.6.3 Procedure of Data Collection

There are some steps to collect the data. First, reading and understand the story, of Endgame. Second, collecting the data based on the problem of the study. Third, making the two grand's theories implication and two supporting theories to produce conclusion of thesis title's meaning. This study will only focus on the behavior that was done by Hamm in the plays.

1.6.4 Procedure of Data Analysis

The data which have been collected will be analyzed using literary theory. The research follows some steps. First, Selecting and collecting data in form of narration and conversation from the playwright related to the problem. Then, analyzing the data collected dealing with the statement of problems. The last, drawing conclusion based on the result of data analysis.

1.7. Definition of Key Terms

- 1.7.1. Drama script: script of a drama which is used as conversation by main characters in the drama.
- 1.7.2. Speech Act: Action performed via utterances (Yule, 1996: 47).
- 1.7.3. Awareness: Conscious in subject.

CHAPTER 2

LITERATURE REVIEW

2.1. Theoretical Framework

This chapter aims to explain some theories which will be applied to analyze the plays End Game by Samuel Beckett. The focus of the study is to find out the awareness that portrayed in the character of Hamm and to know the effect of his absurdity as self-discovery in the story. Thus, this study decides that Jean Paul Sratre's Existentialism would be the appropriate theory and Jacques Lacan's Psychoanalysis would be supporting theory in providing the academic support for the analysis and two complementary theories.

2.1.1 Jean Paul Sartre Existensialism Theory

Existensialism is in the broader sense does a 20th century philosophy that is centered upon the analysis of existence and of the way humans find themselves exist in the world. The notion is that humans exist first and then each individual spends a lifetime changing their essence nature.

In simpler terms, existentialism is a philosophy concerned with finding self and the meaning of life through free will, choice, and personal responsibility. Sartre asserts that the key defining concept of existentialism is that the existence of a person is prior to his or her essence. The term "existence precedes essence" subsequently became a maxim of the existentialist movement. Put simply, this means that there is nothing to dictate that person's character, goals in life, and so on; that only the individual can define his or her essence. According to Sartre, "man first of all exists, encounters himself, surges up in the world – and defines himself afterwards".

Although the author's intention or the reader's response is sometimes mentioned in Existensialsm readings of literary texts, neither one is the focus of analysis. For the only way we can know if a given author's intention or a given reader's interpretation actually represents the text's meaning is to carefully examine, or "closely read," all the evidence provided by the language of the text itself: its images, symbols, metaphors, rhyme, meter, point of view, setting, characterization, plot, and so forth, which, because they form, or shape, the literary work are called its formal elements (137).

Jean-Paul Sartre was born in Paris as the only child of Jean-Baptiste Sartre, As a teenager in the 1920s, Sartre became attracted to philosophy upon reading Henri Bergson's essay Time and Free Will: An Essay on the Immediate Data of Consciousness.

Sartre challenged the cultural and social assumptions and expectations of their upbringings, which they considered bourgeois, in both lifestyle and thought. The conflict between oppressive, spiritually destructive conformity (mauvaise foi, literally, "bad faith") and an "authentic" way of "being" became the dominant theme of Sartre's early work, a theme embodied in his principal philosophical work L'Être et le Néant (Being and Nothingness) (1943). Sartre's introduction to his philosophy is his work Existentialism and Humanism (1946), originally presented as a lecture.

Sartre's primary idea is that people, as humans, are "condemned to be free". This theory relies upon his position that there is no creator, and is illustrated using the example of the paper cutter. Sartre says that if one considered a paper cutter, one would assume that the creator would have had a plan for it: an essence. Sartre said that human beings have no essence before their existence because there is no Creator. Thus: "existence precedes essence". This forms the basis for his assertion that since one cannot explain one's own actions and behaviour by referencing any specific human nature, they are necessarily fully responsible for those actions. "We are left alone, without excuse." "We can act without being determined by our past which is always separated from us." Sartre maintained that the concepts of authenticity and individuality have to be earned but not learned. We need to experience "death consciousness" so as to wake up ourselves as to what is really important; the authentic in our lives which is life experience, not knowledge. Death draws the final point when we as beings cease to live for ourselves and permanently become objects that exist only for the outside world. In this way death emphasizes the burden of our free, individual existence.

As a junior lecturer at the Lycée du Havre in 1938, Sartre wrote the novel La Nausée (Nausea), which serves in some ways as a manifesto of existentialism and remains one of his most famous books. Taking a page from the German phenomenological movement, he believed that our ideas are the product of experiences of real-life situations, and that novels and plays can well describe such fundamental experiences, having equal value to discursive essays for the elaboration of philosophical theories such as existentialism. With such purpose, this novel concerns a dejected researcher (Roquentin) in a town similar to Le Havre who becomes starkly conscious of the fact that inanimate objects and situations remain absolutely indifferent to his existence. As such, they show themselves to be resistant to whatever significance human consciousness might perceive in them.

He also took inspiration from phenomenologist epistemology, explained by Franz Adler in this way: "Man chooses and makes himself by acting. Any action implies the judgment that he is right under the circumstances not only for the actor, but also for everybody else in similar circumstances."

This indifference of "things in themselves" (closely linked with the later notion of "being-in-itself" in his Being and Nothingness) has the effect of highlighting all the more the freedom Roquentin has to perceive and act in the world; everywhere he looks, he finds situations imbued with meanings which bear the stamp of his existence. Hence the "nausea" referred to in the title of the book; all that he encounters in his everyday life is suffused with a pervasive, even horrible, taste—specifically, his freedom. The book takes the term from Friedrich Nietzsche's Thus Spoke Zarathustra, where it is used in the context of the often nauseating quality of existence. No matter how much Roquentin longs for something else or something different, he cannot get away from this harrowing evidence of his engagement with the world.

The novel also acts as a terrifying realization of some of Immanuel Kant's fundamental ideas about freedom; Sartre uses the idea of the autonomy of the will (that morality is derived from our ability to choose in reality; the ability to choose being derived from human freedom; embodied in the famous saying "Condemned to be free") as a way to show the world's indifference to the individual. The freedom that Kant exposed is here a strong burden, for the freedom to act towards objects is ultimately useless, and the practical application of Kant's ideas proves to be bitterly rejected.

Sartre wrote successfully in a number of literary modes and made major contributions to literary criticism and literary biography. His plays are richly symbolic and serve as a means of conveying his philosophy. The best-known, Huis-clos (No Exit), contains the famous line "L'enfer, c'est les autres", usually translated as "Hell is other people." Aside from the impact of Nausea, Sartre's major work of fiction was The Roads to Freedom trilogy which charts the progression of how World War II affected Sartre's ideas. In this way, Roads to Freedom presents a less theoretical and more practical approach to existentialism.

From the explanation above, this study uses Existensialsm as supporting theory to identify the main character, Hamm. It will be a guidance to understand all about the character of Hamm. It will help the researcher in identifying the awareness identity that has shows by Hamm in the play.

2.1.2. Jacques Lacan Psychoanalysis Theory

Psychology is the endlessly fascinating human mind and behavior (Gillespie 43). The word psychology is derived from Greek word psyche that means soul and logos means science. The meaning of psychology is the science of soul or the science that identifies and learns about human behavior (Atkitson 7). Psychology concerns with human mind and behavior and the aim is giving better understanding of human being.

Human being has their own unique to live in their life. Some people may have same purpose but every of them have different way to do. Santrock said in his book that everyone has their own characteristic of personality or the character they behave. The character deals with mind, feeling, and behavior that showing how they live in life (435). That is called personality.

Personality refers to the characteristic patterns of behavior and ways of thinking that determine a person's adjustment to his environment. It is shaped by human potency since they was born and modified by culture and common experiences that affect them as individual (Hilgard 396). It is about the uniqueness of person, that is, the characteristic that distinguishes him or her from other people. Personality shows how a person will act or react under different circumstances. One of personality theories is psychoanalysis.

Psychoanalytic concepts have become part of our everyday lives, and therefore psychoanalytic thinking should have the advantage of familiarity.

The goal of psychoanalysis is to help us resolve our psychological problems.

It is the way to get better understanding of human mind and behavior. Then, it must certainly be able to help us understanding literary texts, which are about human behavior (Tyson 11). This science is a branch of psychology that gives big contribution and has been made to human psychology today.

According to Brenner, psychoanalytic theory is a body of hypotheses concerning mental functioning and development in a man (Brenner 11). Mental is something that relates to psycho or soul and gives influence to individual behavior. Every individual behavior and expression is an impulse and shadowing from their mental condition. By applying psychoanalysis theory on literature, it can give us an understanding about the mental or the psychological condition of the author or the characters in story.

This theory is developed by Jacques Lacan, Lacan and psychoanalysis are practically synonymous terms today. Jacques Lacan expanded upon the developments of Freud in psychology and psychoanalysis. The first idea that stands out is his shift in perspective in regards to the unconscious. Instead of positioning the unconscious as an unwieldy director of drive, Lacan suggested that "The unconscious is structured as a language." (Lacan 1998) He explained the unconscious as a source of real truth which was best confronted head-on.

Freud introduces three basic structures as division of the mind: the id, the ego, and the superego. He said in Minder that the id is like a king or queen, the ego as a prime minister, and the superego as the highest priest. The id acts as absolute leader, respectful, spoiled, arbitrariness, and selfish. All the need of id has to be satisfied. The ego as prime minister has a duty to finish anything that related to reality and responsive toward the need of society. Superego is like a priest who always encourages anything based on the value of good and bad. It has to remind the Id that smart and wise behavior is important (21).

2.1.2.1.Lacan and Personality Development

Whereas theorists like Dabrowski and Maharishi focused on development later in life, Lacan and Freud emphasized the importance of early experiences. Lacan also rejects the hierarchical approach to personality development, and stands in absolute opposition any end goals of personality development, such as Maharishi's enlightenment through Unity Consciousness or Dabrowski's fifth stage, Secondary Integration.

This is not to say that development doesn't continue throughout adulthood - it simply means that Lacan did not feel comfortable imposing society's understanding of peak achievement on other people. Rather, his analysis led to traversing the fantasy, which allowed the patient to come to terms with the insatiable nature of desire.

2.1.2.2. The Fundamental Fantasy

Lacan realized early in his career the risk of a patient continuing their poor behavior despite having traversed the fantasy. A patient may even feel encouraged to pursue their problematic activity as a result of the liberation offered by the loss of their ties to societal norms. Therefore, Lacan conceptualized a "fundamental fantasy" which lurks beneath and supports all of the fantasies we experience. If this foundational construct is addressed, analysis may not be effective. An authentic Act must confront and traverse the fundamental fantasy (Zizek 1999: 266 and 307). Such an Act can only be accomplished by fully embracing the death drive "in its most radical dimension of traversing the fantasy" (Zizek 1999: 390). This pushes the patient into subjective destitution, where jouissance is embraced head on. Zizek often explains this shift in terms of a hand reaching for an object which perpetually pushes itself out of reach. From the perspective of desire, one would believe the object reachable. Once this fantasy is traversed, we move into drive, yet continue to reach for the object, knowing that it will never be reached.

2.1.2.3. Lacanian Psychoanalytic Methodology

Subjectivity, by definition, requires linguistic immersion on both conscious and unconscious levels. Therefore, desire is at once impossible to fulfill and inescapable. Lacan's approach was to walk the patient through a process which displayed this structure to the patient. A process of mourning is needed - for the loss of the object of desire, as it is revealed as impossible to attain; mourning for the analyst who cannot bring immediate comfort; and mourning as castration is fully accepted.

Psychoanalysis may accompany the patient to the ecstatic limit of the "Thou art that," in which is revealed to him the cipher of his mortal destiny, but it is not in our mere power as practitioners to bring him to that point where the real journey begins (Lacan and Fink 2002 pg. 8).

Lacan might have simply made this realization explicit for Frisell by showing how desire keeps him picking up his guitar again and again, never leaving him satisfied with his musical capabilities. This process would qualify as a fantastic traversal: The fantasy of being a master of guitar is shattered by the realization that we can never satiate our urge to become a better musician.

2.1.2.4.From Desire to Drive

The Act of traversing the fantasy pushes the subject from the realm of desire into a state of drive. Despite his understanding of the nature of his relationship with the guitar, Frisell nonetheless continues to play - perhaps more ambitiously than before this realization occurred. Within this space of subjective destitution, a new perspective is embraced. This is the final step of Lacan's analysis - to push the patient to the limit of their fantasy as to traverse the fantasy and move from desire to drive. How the patient responds to this change is unique for each individual - preserving their personal integrity and blocking unfair influence coming from the analyst.

From the explanation above, Lacan's psychoanalysis theory as the supporting theory is used to analyze the main character of Endgame, Hamm, especially how he realized about critics are increasingly recognizing, making criticism socially significant means focusing precisely on the effects produced by cultural artifacts in the subjects and symbolic of the metaphor governing the setting has been variously identified as a bomb shelter in the wake of a nuclear war, the interior of an individual's mind on the stages as life's manifestation. This study wants to reveal the awareness that portrayed in the plays and Rather than encouraging systematic reflection on and intervention in the psychological, social, and political effects that various texts and discourses might produce in those who receive and consume them, humanities scholars have variously ignored, denied, or even celebrated the inconsequential nature of their own critical activity, resting content with platitudes about liberal education while perpetuating its relative inconsequentiality through curricula that emphasize consumption and analysis of literary texts as objects of knowledge.

2.1.3. Society in the Individual

As the transition from mechanical to organic society suggests, individuals are influenced by the society in which they live. While society cannot exist without the individuals that compose it, it represents a much greater force than merely the summation of all its parts. Durkheim believed that out of all possible environments that could affect the individual, the social environment was the strongest. He wrote, Man depends upon only three kinds of environment: the organism, the external world and society. If we set aside chance variations due to the combinations of heredity—and their role in human progress is certainly not very considerable—the organism is not modified spontaneously; it must be constrained to do so by some external cause. As for the physical world, from the very dawn of history this has remained appreciably unchanged, if at least we take no account of innovations of a social origin. Consequently there is only society that has changed enough to be able to explain the parallel changes in the nature of the individual. (Durkheim, 1984: 286)

Durkheim alluded to the debate of nature versus nurture. Heredity, he believed, did not play an important role in the evolution of the individual. Society, however, greatly affects individuals, and Durkheim rationalized his belief by emphasizing their parallel developments. Just as mechanical solidarity depended on the collective consciousness, so too did the individual in that society. Similarly, as society became divided through the division of labor, the individual underwent changes as well, becoming specialized in certain tasks, taking on various roles, and forming numerous relationships with others.

Durkheim pointed to social facts to further illustrate the relationship between the individual and society. In describing the nature of social institutions and their origins, he wrote, these are things which exist in their own right. The individual finds them already formed, and he cannot act as if they did not exist or were different from how they are...Of course, the individual plays a role in their genesis. (Durkheim, 1972: 71)

The synergy between individuals and the societies in which they live is crucial to Durkheim's theories. Social facts such as economy, education, and religion have no material substance, and although individuals are at the core of their creation, they cannot support such institutions. Social facts help define individuals; they provide a sense of belonging within the larger whole of society. Just as Durkheim divided individuals into two parts, the body and the soul, we can analyze his notion of society in a similar manner.

Individuals constitute the body of society, that which is personal and profane. The soul of society can be described through its social facts and institutions, its components that are not materially based, but that extend their power over the whole. In this respect, social facts are sacred and impersonal because they are distant from the individual, yet they still influence our everyday lives. Furthermore, while individuals depend on the coexistence of the body and soul, society does so in the same manner.

Individuals comprise society's existence, yet its soul, the social facts and institutions, govern the ways that its individuals carry out their lives, just as the individual's soul governs his/her morality. Both the individual and society are complex concepts that Durkheim addresses in his works. Society is the soul that runs through the veins of its individuals.

They are not always aware of its existence, yet it governs their everyday thoughts and experience. His notion of the society within the individual falls short only with his admission that individuals must precede the birth of society in order to create it. Nonetheless, Durkheim provided the discourse of sociology with theories that explored society and the individuals through which it is represented.

2.1.4. Personality and Social Crisis

Allport redeployed the behaviorist distinction "between personality devaluated and personality evaluated, that is, between personality and character. it was a message born out of his own close proximity to the idiom of experimental psychology. His recent Harvard experience had underscored the growing power of scientific rhetoric and the importance of institutional support. One way of gaining this support was to constitute the object of study along preexisting methodological and discursive lines.

The Psychology of and his work to establish the Society for the Psychological Study of Social Issues (SPSS1)-a scholarly organization designed to lend scientific support for "all progressive action that promises to aid in the preservation and creation of human value. Allport's commitment to applied psychology was undeniable, but his approach to personality remained largely unaffected by the upheavals of the Depression. He carefully compartmentalized his politically informed, applied work in social psychology with his study of personality.

Anxious to secure a scholarly niche for personality within the stridently scientific discipline of psychology, Allport viewed this multiplicity of definitions with alarm. Imprecise terminology "retards the interpretation of reliabilities," he argued, "[and] is generally prejudicial to advance in the field (95). The Personality as a Whole. The definition of the unit of personality is one problem pressing for solution. Equally insistent is the demand for a theory as to the way in which units are related in personality.

Griffith (15) writes, "The fusion of unnumbered experiences into a single unit bearing a total character of its own or the fusion of behavior patterns of different kinds into consistent and internally coherent systems is a problem that the psychologist has barely touched. Even his generalizations about a 'common factor' are vague in the extreme. A problem lies here, however, that cannot be ignored.

That totality of mental life and behavior called 'personality' or 'character' is, perhaps, the most unique thing about the human organism." The first step in the solution of this problem is to determine to what extent a personality is to be treated as an integer. If it is a true integer, then each trait must reflect but an aspect of a synthesis in which all components are congruous. Under such a condition it would be true of the personality, as Lavater said of the human body, that no member contradicts another, for each has the character of the whole.

For instance, Margaret Mead argued that her famous South Sea studies showed that "cultural rhythms are stronger and more compelling than the physiological rhythms which they overlay and distort [and] that the failure to satisfy an artificial, culturally stimulated need . . . may produce more unhappiness and frustration . . . than the most rigorous cultural curtailment of the physiological demands of sex or hunger." Mead's study and others like it were often called studies in "culture and personality."

2.2. Review of Related Studies

There are some students who had used the sacrifice as their focus in thesis but in different novel for their analysis. In contrast, there is one student that uses same plays with this study but in different focus. Those studies had been done by one student of Boğaziçi University Faculty of Arts and Sciences Department of Western Languages and Literatures, Istanbul Turki and student's Faculty of Arts & Social Sciences Government College University Faisalabad, Pakistan.

The first study is The Elements of Jean-Paul Sartre's Existentialism in Samuel Beckett's Five Plays: Waiting for Godot, Endgame, Krapp's Last Tape, Play, Not I by Şebnem Nazlı Karalı. This study identifies, Beckett's five plays, namely Waiting for Godot, Endgame, Krapp's Last Tape, Not I, and Play are approached within the Sartrean world of existentialism. Even though Beckett's plays entertain many elements of Sartre's existentialism, they differ from each other in certain points.

The consciousness, i.e. the pour soi is negative with its dependency on the being, i.e. the en soi, in Sartrean world. However, Beckett's voice of consciousness carry a positivity.

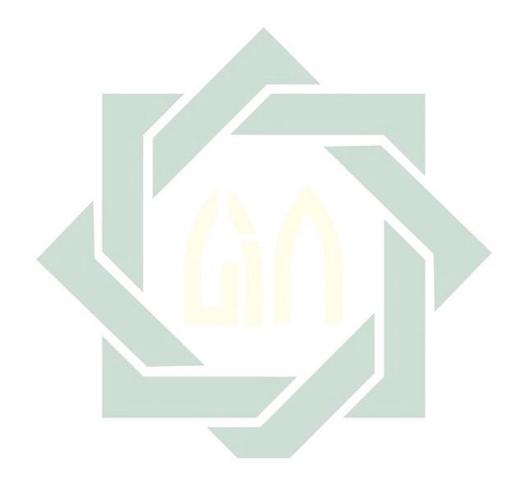

Moreover, the Irreducible of Becket, which is the essential part that remains when all the inessential is removed, functions as a being-nothing. Hence, it is both positive and negative.

Yet, Sartre depends on the distinction between being and nothingness. He firmly believes there is a reciprocal contradiction between the two. In the plays of Beckett, we move to underneath of the consciousness where the opposites gather together. In Sartre's world, man is depicted as a futile passion because he aims at the union of the en soi and the pour soi.

However, only God embodies this mutual contradiction. For Sartre, this union, by default and by definition, is logically impossible because le néant and l'être are incompatible with each other. This brings the futility of manhood which projects himself towards such a union of opposites. Yet, the Irreducible is impossibly there. It inescapably exists.

The second study is Play of Pauses in Samuel Beckett's Endgame: A Postmodern Threshold by Dr. Muhammad ShahbazArif. It deals In an effort to look for the significance of pauses in Beckett's Endgame one can actually make a choice to unfold vigour energies of postmodernism. The pauses explore the procedure for the liberation of language in postmodern text. The incessant styles of postmodernism are enormously spoken through the unique play pauses in the text. The formidable benevolence of the "moment of,,différance" has got its complication through the happening of pauses. The unfixity of text"s final meaning is continued through the creation of unspoken mark and by decentering the authority of transcendental signified. The pauses occur to propose significations and ultimately deferring their presence to establish a condition of self-reflexivity by sticking to the state of failing centers to continue an interminable process of negotiation. The unfamiliar discourse of pauses is baffling and like Derrida"s,,différance" is ineluctably precarious. It engages itself in declaring the tendencies of postmodernism by invigorating the neologism of Ihab Hassan i.e. "Indetermanence", an attempt of theoretical definition of postmodernism.

CHAPTER 3

ANALYSIS

This chapter presents the analysis of the data which contains the descriptions of the absurdity as self-discovery made by Hamm based on his ambiguity act, awareness as a subject, and existensialsm which influence his resistense of depiction of humanity's denial. This study wants to analyze the awareness as subject through Hamm's character. Firstly examining on his character, it is hoped to gain profound knowledge about the character of Hamm clearly. After having the fundamental background of Hamm's character, then it is intended to reveal his absurdity behavior as self-discovery toward other character. Secondly, after getting understanding of his self-discovery, it will be guidance to identify the effect of his awareness that influences his entire life.

3.1. The Absurdity as Self-Discovery by Hamm in Endgame

Eugene Ionesco: "Absurd is that which is devoid of purpose...cut off from his religious, metaphysical, and transcendental roots, man is losr; all his actions become senseless, absurd, useless" - Dans les armes de la ville, (1957). What has happened is that for years, for centuries, the theater combined the roles of theater and cinema for audiences that needed the film but had no inkling of what it could be, for it had not yet been invented. Contrary to the common assertion, the emergence of the cinema did not plunge the theater into a crisis nor did it injure the art of theater. It did in fact injure some theatrical producers by depriving them of part of their public, and it did harm a certain type of theater, specifically the type which was a substitute for the cinema, that is to say the bourgeois realistic theater—realistic in that its aim was the accurate representation of reality—and harmed it because after a certain date cinematographic realism seemed to have downgraded theatrical realism permanently (to someone seeing a film a tree is a real tree, whereas a tree on the stage always looks false).

As early as 1928 Artaud was so deeply impressed by this singularity and evanescence of performance that he wrote, "The theater will aim at being truly an act, subject to every twist and every turn of circumstance, and chance will always have its say. There is no longer a plot in the sense of a well-constructed anecdote with a beginning, middle, and end; there is no plot anymore because Beckett believe that plot means diverting and distracting the audience's attention from the essential. The purpose of plot was to please.

Beckett do not want to please; they want a subject, that is to say a developing total theme rather than recipes for constructing an anecdote within a tale. Beckett is not in favor of discarding the whole idea of construction, but he try to construct the subject within a tight frame; his construction is basically concerned with time—which is the raw material of drama. At the level on which he want to work, which for him (no matter whether it is comic, tragic, or simply blackly humorous) is the level of the subterranean forces or, if prefer it the level of the human adventure, on that level the essential conditions of the human adventure are no longer realistic because it can no longer really grasp it.

3.1.1. Jean Paul-Sartre Existentialsm

In chronological terms, Endgame (1957) follows the journey towards the Irreducible. In Waiting for Godot, Vladimir and Estragon are waiting to be, to exist departing from their minus nothingness. In Endgame, an end is aimed at departing from being/existence to nothingness. However, even in the opening speech of Hamm, an end seems to be an impossible end:

HAMM: And yet I hesitate, I hesitate to... to end. Yes, there it is, it's time it ended and yet I 36hesitate to— (He yawns.)—to end. (Yawns.)

Obviously he wishes death to come but simultaneously he hesitates to finish. The routine Clov and Hamm belong to is an alibi to convince themselves that each and everyday is the same and death seems to be asleep far away.

Death is immediately outside but does not stop by the "claustrophobic 21" interior" (Esslin 40). Like Pozzo and Lucky in Waiting for Godot, Hamm appears as the king and a ham player whereas Clov as the pawn. Even though Hamm is the so-called master of the household who is socially superior, the tension is all about whether Clov is going to leave Hamm or not. Clov is much stronger than Hamm because Clov is the one who makes Hamm's existence possible. Hamm's anxiety and fear of Clov's absence is implied through his apprehensive questionings:

HAMM (violently): Then move!

(Clov goes to back wall, leans against it with his forehead and hands.)

Where are you?

CLOV: Here.

HAMM: Come back!

(Clov returns to his place beside the chair.)

Where are you?

CLOV: Here.

There is a philosophical problem embedded in the question of why the infant needs empathic responsiveness and mirroring in order to develop selfesteem. This is the ancient philosophical problem of the existence of others. Sometimes referred to as the problem of solipsism, it involves the question of how knowing that there are other consciousnesses—that Hamm not alone in the universe. Sartre attempts to solve the problem of solipsism by providing a description of an experience of "apodictic certainty" similar to the certainty about one's own existence as a consciousness which Descartes attributes to the thinking subject.

Loquacity demonstrates an unconcealed need for getting and giving a hug under which the notion of pity is implied:

HAMM: ... One day you'll know what it is, you'll be like me, except that you won't have anyone with you, because you won't have had pity on anyone and because there won't be anyone left to have pity on you.

(22)

Friendship seems to include a necessity in which both parts surrender each other because of their inevitable dependency on each other: Clov has nowhere to go while Hamm no one to keep. As a consequence, they stay together with no hope in their hearts. The fact that time exists is undoubtedly agreed as through time the characters become decrepit.

However, the notion of time as a continuum is not perceived enough in the plays. Each and every day resembles each other without a sense of finality accompanied by a desire of an end. Godot is expected to arrive at some point, which never occurs. Endgame is not expected to end with a stalemate but with the arrival of death and abandonment of Clov. This creates a need for invention of a constructed past with which the characters find a chance to look to the future. Without a past, neither present nor future can exist and the characters construct their own past and remember it with nostalgia:

NELL: Why this farce, day after day?

(Pause.)

NAGG: I've lost me tooth.

NELL: When?

NAGG: I had it yesterday.

NELL (elegiac): Ah yesterday.

(They turn painfully towards each other.)

The problem is they do not talk about their experiences in the past, instead they construct a 23 past which they fill with the help of their imagination. Ironically, they themselves do not believe that their story has happened once. To illustrate, Hamm calls his story "he's been telling himself all his days" "my chronicle". It is not a matter of remembrance but a matter of reconstruction. With all this suspicion in the chronicles told, communication becomes impossible. A torrent of words or sentences carries no meaning, yet they are a means of passing time, filling it with voice.

But, what determines the present is not the past they construct but the freedom of the present to which the future gives way. Sartre points out that man is free.

Freedom means consciousness which is a void. Void is nothingness and in this vicious circle nothingness arrives at freedom again. However, the facticity of freedom creates a barrier against their freedom: fear of being alone. Nonetheless, neither the silent scream of Hamm nor the hesitation of Clov as to his would-be departure gives any meaning to their present.

The cyclic nature of existence gives Hamm fright. He wonders about the change in the world, which culminates in "Zero" with Clov's words:

HAMM (gesture towards window right): Have you looked?

CLOV: Yes.

HAMM: Well?

CLOV: Zero.

HAMM: It'd need to rain.

CLOV: It won't rain.

(Pause.)

Even the milieu has a static character: "Grey Light" forever. "The light is sunk" when Clov looks out of the window left. It is neither night nor morning: It is Gray. No more tides are observed lead waves fill the motionless sea. It will not rain, the seeds will never sprout. On the contrary to Hamm's belief, nature is not changing not because "nature has forgotten" them but because "there's no more nature":

HAMM: Look at the ocean!

(Clov gets down, takes a few steps towards window left, goes back for ladder, 37 carries it over and sets it down under window left, gets up on it, turns the telescope on the without, looks at length. He starts, lowers the telescope, examines it, turns it again on the without.)

CLOV: Never seen anything like that!

HAMM (anxious): What? A sail? A fin? Smoke?

CLOV (looking): The light is sunk.

HAMM (relieved): Pah! We all knew that.

CLOV (looking): There was a bit left.

HAMM: The base.

CLOV (looking): Yes.

HAMM: And now?

CLOV (looking): All gone.

This becomes clear when one understands that for Sartre, the beginning of self-reflection lies to a great extent in the reflection of others on the self to which one can now add disclosure to others who see and (one hopes) comprehend oneself. Sartre therefore believes that the "ethicalontological" truth that one must create one's own value "must be revealed slowly" at the "end of a long vagabond delusion" (FI, 1:136). To reveal it earlier through lack of valorization is to subject the child to the delusion not simply of being unjustified but of being "unjustifiable"—that is, unable to make a meaningful life— The senseless existence which the unloved child discovers in himself or herself is therefore a lying truth, whereas the meaningfulness which the loved child has conferred on him or her is a true lie. The unloved child—though he or she can discover orderly connections, means and ends, in the world—can discover no reason for his or her own being. In other words, the unloved child is unable to form an authentic project of being—though such a child may make a project of trying to get the love that was missing in infancy and early childhood.

The lie of the parental mandate leads to the truth of discovering one's existence as a temporal being who creates meaning. The truth of a too early confrontation with the meaninglessness of contingent existence~in~itself, based on the experience of parental neglect or hostility, leads to the lie of disregarding one's temporalizing destiny.

These moments are of continuous process therefore there is no end to a life until death cuts the throat of life. Clov, the submissive Knight in the play, cannot end his tenure in this place and pass another. Hamm The King is already afraid to be alone even though he presents a misanthropic posture:

CLOV: I'll leave you, I have things to do.

HAMM: In your kitchen?

They continue their inescapable routines in order to survive at least one more day and the game ends with a stalemate with suggesting a successive match.

As Waiting for Godot suggests, death as an event cannot be realized, however, the characters are running down by and by throughout the journey back to their childhood. They become debilitated and defenseless versions of themselves, which can be exemplified by Nagg's speech-insenile meaninglessness in the repetition of oneself:

NAGG: Me pap!

HAMM: Accursed progenitor!

NAGG: Me pap!

Moreover, first the flea from which "humanity might start all over again", second the rat –halfly- are exterminated by Clov with the fear of cyclic nature of existence. Lastly the boy who is a "potential procreator" is mentioned. Hamm thinks the boy's being will culminate in death or he will come to his house where they cannot end this life. Both Clov and Hamm have 40 no more endurance for the alive with a capacity of giving birth. They "have had enough".

Nevertheless, they are again far away from the end even though they are exterminating progenitors. The end of things will never come closer and the further they get the closer they are to the end of Endgame. Unfortunately, Hamm learns "there's no more pain-killer" at the sixth time he asks for his pain-killer.

From a Sartrean perspective, of course, the power of language and cultureas practico-inert are also recognized, along with the fact that change is notan easy matter. It is possible, however, since one is struggling not with anunconscious Other from whence one is created as a subject, but with the Other as (prior) praxis inscribed in the practico-inert. And though the Sartrean subject does not exist outside of language, any more than consciousness anywhere exists separately from its objects, the fact of human transcendence makes it possible to struggle with a cultural order that makes one as one makes it.

Obviously, neither Sartre nor Lacan will follow Hegel here. Both maintain that human reality remains what Hegel refers to as an "unhappy consciousness"— a consciousness hopelessly divided against itself. And Lacan would even deny that this division is wholly conscious. Nor would either Sartre or Lacan agree with Hegel's view of history as a dialectical development of which the various moments connote spiritual progress.

3.1.2. Jacques Lacan Psychoanalysis

The problem is that in reducing the conscious subject to a mere "effect of the signifier" (Lacan, 1973, p. 207), Lacan removes from the human subject the possibility of meaningful transformation. Lacan believes that it is with the insertion of the individual into the symbolic-linguistic order that both the conscious subject (je, I) and the unconscious subject (Other[A]) come into existence.

Created by and existing only through language, the Lacanian subject is in many ways identical to the linguistic shifter. According to Lacan's oft-repeated definition, "The signifier is that which represents a subject for another signifier" (1966, p. 316, 1973, pp. 20*J* and 236). The conscious subject is therefore no more the "real self" than the specular ego is.

3.1.2.1. Lacan and Personality Development

Despite what Lacan's definition of the signifier implies, he also insists that a subject is never identical to any signifier: "The subject that [the signifier] represents is not univocal; [the subject] is represented, undoubtedly, but it is also not represented" (XVII, 101). Represented but also not represented: my claim that the subject is like a signified effect is able to account for both of these ideas and will be able to show how a subject has both metonymic and metaphoric characteristics.

HAMM: Take me for a little turn.

(Clov goes behind the chair and pushes it forward.)

Not too fast!

(Clov pushes chair.)

Right round the world!

(Clov pushes chair.)

Hug the walls, then back to the center again.

(Clov pushes chair.)

I was right in the center, wasn't I?

CLOV (pushing):

Yes.

Lacan and Freud emphasized the importance of early experiences, Lacan also rejects the hierarchical approach to personality development, and stands in absolute opposition any end goals of personality development, such as Maharishi's enlightenment through Unity Consciousness or Dabrowski's fifth stage, Secondary Integration that Lacan did not feel comfortable imposing society's understanding of peak achievement on other people. Rather, his analysis led to traversing the fantasy, which allowed the patient to come to terms with the insatiable nature of desire.

The though believe that Freud uses the terms "ideal ego" (Idealich) and "ego ideal" (Ichideal) interchangeably and as precursors to his concept of the superego, Lacan points out that Freud does in fact use all three terms to make a distinction which is important to Lacan.

The ideal ego, unlike the ego ideal, is based on a "fictional" identification with an image of wholeness that is intended to negate the human being's "organic insufficiency in his natural reality" (Lacan, 1966, pp. 2 and 4).

The ego itself will always bear signs of this fictional, imagistic origin. This is the first alienation, and it refers to an absolutely crucial gap which structures human reality as temporal—as referring from present insufficiency to future wholeness: this development is experienced as a temporal dialectic that decisively projects the formation of the individual into history. The mirror stage is a drama whose internal thrust is precipitated from insufficiency to anticipation—and which manufactures for the subject, caught up in the lure of spatial identification, the succession of phantasies that extends from a fragmented body-image to a form of its totality that I shall call orthopedic—and lastly to the assumption of the armor of an alienating identity, which will mark with its rigid structure the subject's entire mental development. (Lacan, 1966, p. 4)

It shows in Hamm statement, when he is helping by Clov for little run, as a signifier and the signidied from a chair, it means Hamm wants to make other position from beginning with his weakness because the chair is a symbol of immobilized master to Clov.

CLOV: We haven't done the round.

HAMM: Back to my place!

(Clov pushes chair back to center.)

Is that my place?

CLOV: Yes, that's your place.

HAMM: Am I right in the center?

CLOV: I'll measure it.

HAMM: More or less! More or less!

CLOV (moving chair slightly):

```
There!
HAMM: I'm more or less in the center?
CLOV: I'd say so.
HAMM: You'd say so! Put me right in the center!
CLOV: I'll go and get the tape.
HAMM: Roughly! Roughly!
(Clov moves chair slightly.)
Bang in the center!
CLOV: There!
(Pause.)
HAMM: I feel a little too far to the left.
(Clov moves chair slightly.)
Now I feel a little too far to the right.
(Clov moves chair slightly.)
I feel a little too far forward.
(Clov moves chair slightly.)
Now I feel a little too far back.
(Clov moves chair slightly.)
Don't stay there.
(i.e. behind the chair)
you give me the shivers.
(Clov returns to his place beside the chair.)
```

From the quotation above, it is clear that Hamm knows about the awareness to making sure his position. Even Clov often tells to him how much he had in the center.

That is also resistance for developing himself, Hamm just repeating with any skepticism and this situation make someone's fantasy always encourage the identity to top of desire and it affecting the behavior. Hamm shows how people so poor and so weak to develope himself to be ideal image. The most important point in personality development is early experience, the relational between signifier and signified from quotation above is According to Lacan "the subject is constituted, or not, as a bearer of this unary trait" (IX, 2/28/62). When there is a subject that is constituted as the bearer of this trait, there is a subject-as-meaning, despite the fact that the name itself is meaningless. My name precedes me, and to this extent my place in the linguistic and social other is given before my birth. This is all my name does—it gives me a place. This meaningless signifier, however, is also the bearer of a string of meanings provided that other signifiers enter into the picture, bringing about an operation similar to what happens in metaphor. Here again, the other signifier at work would be the place in the Other from which I am looked at and possibly desired, for example, the Other's affirmation of the signifier that gives me a place. So to the extent that I am talked about and desired (or not) by means of this meaningless "trait" existing in most cases before I am born, a discursive place is already carved out for me in the other. My name functions as the representative point of this "talk," this knot of signifiers whose consistency makes up the stuff of the subject- as-meaning. Once again, we see that the construction of the subject as- meaning may thus precede the actual birth of the individual.

3.1.2.2. Fundamental Fantasy

The definition of the subject Lacan gives in his fourteenth seminar takes into account both the fact that a subject is produced by an interaction of signifiers, and the fact that it is contingent upon a particular kind of event within a signifying chain. How Lacan's conceptions of fantasy and the act represent different ways in which this definition takes shape, and how they allow us to flesh out the subject's structure. According to Lacan, metaphor is to be defined as "the structure of the superimposition of the signifiers" (1966, p. 160). As Ragland-Sullivan notes, it is therefore to be regarded as "first a function and only second an iconic mode of meaning" (1986, p. 255). Metaphor is the function by which one signifier can be substituted for another, rather than simply a figure of speech with a reference outside.

Lacan intends to show "not how men think in language but how linguistic structure thinks in men, unbeknownst to them." Behind all of this, of course, lies the structuralist emphasis on structure over event. But the synchronic determinism which results from this emphasis opens Lacan's theory to the objections we have made to deterministic psychoanalysis in general—that it denies the philosophical premises which might sustain a theory of change in psychotherapy. One might, of course, take Lacan's definition of the goal of psychoanalysis as a movement from "empty speech" to "full speech" as a sign that transformation is possible. "\eta on closer inspection, it appears that full speech has nothing to do with the genuine communication which might be promoted in existentialist therapy.

```
NAGG: Let me tell it again.
(Raconteur's voice.)
An Englishman, needing a pair of striped trousers in a hurry for the New Year festivities, goes to his tailor who takes his measurements.
(Tailor's voice.)
"That's the lot, come back in four days, I'll have it ready." Good. Four days later.
(Tailor's voice.)
"So sorry, come back in a week, I've made a mess of the seat." Good, that's all right, a neat seat can be very ticklish. A week later.
(Tailor's voice.)
"Frightfully sorry, come back in ten days, I've made a hash of the crotch." Good, can't be helped, a snug crotch is always a teaser. Ten days later.
(Tailor's voice.)
"Dreadfully sorry, come back in a fortnight, I've made a balls of the fly." Good, at a pinch, a smart fly is a stiff proposition.
(Pause. Normal voice.)
I never told it worse.
(Pause. Gloomy.)
I tell this story worse and worse.
(Pause. Raconteur's voice.)
```

Well, to make it short, the bluebells are blowing and he ballockses the buttonholes.

```
(Customer's voice.)
```

"God damn you to hell, Sir, no, it's indecent, there are limits! In six days, do you hear me, six days, God made the world. Yes Sir, no less Sir, the WORLD! And you are not bloody well capable of making me a pair of trousers in three months!"

```
(Tailor's voice, scandalized.)
```

"But my dear Sir, my dear Sir, look—

(disdainful gesture, disgustedly)

-at the world-

(Pause.)

and look—

(loving gesture, proudly)

-at my TROUSERS!"

(Pause. He looks at Nell who has remained impassive, her eyes unseeing. He breaks into a high forced laugh, cuts it short, pokes his head towards Nell, launches his laugh again.)

Lacan says that the child receives his or her message in an inverted form, from the Other (XVII, 73–74). The "message" in question is a response to a question about the status of jouissance itself. How jouissance is placeless and resistant to symbolization. Its first irruptions essentially put the child's position with respect to the other into question. Inventing a place and function for jouissance in symbolic terms provides the "solution" to this.

The difference is that jouissance plays a role in this position now. Fantasy is developed in response to the signifying impasse of jouissance. For this reason, fantasy is something like a filter: Lacan calls it a "window on the real" (Lacan 2001, 254). If we expand on this a bit, we can see how fantasy illustrates the way in which a subject is situated at a junction and disjunction of language and jouissance. The fantasy's placing of jouissance in language also creates a subject of the fantasy—a subject situated in a particular relation to the other and to jouissance. In this respect, the subject of fantasy is situated at the junction of language and jouissance, but also at their disjunction, since something of jouissance continues to escape the fantasmatic situation of jouissance. This part that escapes is where we can find the possibility for a different structuration of the subject, in an act.

HAMM: What window is it?

CLOV: The earth.

The quotation above told the window as a signifier and signified also, the window as a symbol from the object that human can see outside of the home. But in this play, Beckett showing how the window make a signifier from Hamm's space room from around Hamm's isolation world. And the meaning is the earth, as a symbol from the earth is outside his life, but if Hamm can see it if he make foremost section with his reality and social border.

HAMM: Open the window.

CLOV: What for?

HAMM: I want to hear the sea.

CLOV: You wouldn't hear it.

HAMM: Even if you opened the window?

CLOV: No.

HAMM: Than it's not worth while opening it?

CLOV: No.

HAMM (violently):

Than open it!

(Clov gets up on the ladder, opens the window. Pause.)

Have you opened it?

CLOV: Yes.

(Pause.)

HAMM: You swear you've opened it?

CLOV: Yes.

(Pause.)

Hamm always asking to Clov how the window is really open, it show jouissance by Hamm if Cloc said it open once should Hamm to trust it.

3.1.2.3. From Desire to Drive

That is to say that it has no other outcome—Hegel teaches us this—than the destruction of the other" (Lacan,1975, p. 170; italics mine). Thus the subject's desire is confirmed only in an absolute rivalry with the other, in a projection outside which implies the "impossibility of all human coexistence" (Lacan, 1975, p. 171). Indeed, Lacan believes that without the mediation of recognition, which is a function of the entrance into the symbolic order, "every human function would simply exhaust itself in the unspecified wish for the destruction of the other as such" (1975, p. 171). Transitivism is therefore a "drama of primordial jealousy" (Lacan, 1966, p. 5) that points to the Hegelian theme of desire for the death of the other.

Obviously, though Lacan repeatedly cites Hegel's insights into the origins of human aggressivity and the nature of desire as being similar to his own, Lacan's is a strange Hegelianism. Yet because there is no original consciousness in Lacan, the "I" is not a point from which Absolute Knowledge in the Hegelian sense can develop; it is instead a "subject" constantly subverted by the unconscious linguistic order which creates it. And though the laws of the linguistic unconscious (which, as we shall see, are the "laws" of metaphor and metonymy) indicate a kind of rationality, this rationality is the product of neither the individual consciousness (Sartre) nor of the World Historical Spirit realizing itself in existence (Hegel).

The Act of traversing the fantasy pushes the subject from the realm of desire into a state of drive.

HAMM: Go and get two bicycle-wheels.

CLOV: There are no more bicycle-wheels.

HAMM: What have you done with your bicycle?

CLOV: I never had a bicycle.

HAMM: The thing is impossible.

CLOV: When there were still bicycles I wept to have one. I crawled at your feet. You told me to go to hell. Now there are none.

HAMM: And your rounds? When you inspected my paupers. Always on foot?

CLOV: Sometimes on horse.

(The lid of one of the bins lifts and the hands of Nagg appear, gripping the rim. Then his head emerges. Nightcap. Very white face. Nagg yawns, then listens.)

I'll leave you, I have things to do.

Although they were talking about bicycle wheels which Hamm question and Clov's answer is no, then Hamm said the thing is impossible. This conversation has symbols if human desire would be able to drive, in apology if bicycle is fantasy about human's simple transportation and it means human can be firstly use bicycle to get some destination.

The manifestation of drive will get maximally if human use motorcycle or car, this can help human to arrive the destination fastly. Sometimes human used differential transportation for some purposes and situations, sometimes human used bicycle, but sometimes can used horse. This is a choices of kinds of how human controlling from desire to drive.

He is also preventing the comforting and seductive illusion of consensus that shared associations can provide for the audience. In this world things are running out. 'There are no more...' and we are given a long list of expired objects and consumables: 'bicycle wheels,' 'pap,' 'nature,' 'sugar plums,' 'tide,' 'navigators,' 'painkiller,' 'coffins,' and even God ('The bastard! He doesn't exist!'[38]).

This act shows Hamm in order to keep his desire to Clov by simbols of bicycle, on foot, and horse. It describes in the past Hamm was have many bicycle wheels and by Hamm's over desire or ambitions then said to Clov go to hell. Its clearly show how human always have big fantasy about the life, to become happiness and successfully in career and drive all of desire become true with all ways.

Clov tries to weep to have one but he accepted Hamm insulted. And when the bicycle is nothing, Hamm doesn't go anywhere or doing something. Beckett Show how the absurdity of Hamm acting, while the reader know if Hamm is blind and immobilized. This bicycle wheels is a sign and have signifier and signifier elements interpretation by substantial meaning.

3.1.3. Society in the Individual

Humans depend on only three kinds of environments: organisms, the outside world and society. If we exclude accidental variations due to a combination of heredity - and their role in human progress is certainly not too great - organisms are not spontaneously modified; It should be limited to do so by some external cause. As for the physical world, from the beginning of history, this remains unchanged, at least we do not take into account the innovation of social origin. Consequently there is only enough society to change the parallel changes of individual nature. (Durkheim, 1984: 286)

NELL: One mustn't laugh at those things, Nagg. Why must you always laugh at them?

NAGG: Not so loud!

NELL (without lowering her voice):

Nothing is funnier than unhappiness, I grant you that. But—

NAGG (shocked):

Oh!

NELL: Yes, yes, it's the most comical thing in the world. And we laugh, we laugh, with a will, in the beginning. But it's always the same thing. Yes, it's like the funny story we have heard too often, we still find it funny, but we don't laugh any more.

(Pause.)

Have you anything else to say to me?

NAGG: No.

NELL: Are you quite sure?

(Pause.)

Then I'll leave you.

Until one day, when John was still in Iraq for serving his duty to his country, Savannah sent a letter to John that indicates that she will end her relationship with John. She said that she had fallen in love with someone else. It made John feeling disappointed to her because John has felt that Savannah is his dreaming of girl.

Individuals consist of the existence of society, but their souls, facts and social institutions, governing the way individuals conduct their lives, just as the individual soul governs its morality.

Both individuals and society are complex concepts put forward by Durkheim in his works. Society is the soul that flows through the veins of its individuals. They are not always aware of their existence, but it regulates their daily thoughts and experiences. His ideas about society within individuals fell short only by his recognition that the individual must precede the birth of society to create it. Nevertheless, Durkheim provides sociological discourse with a theory that explores the society and the individuals through which it is represented.

From the conversation above, it told that Savannah asks the reason of John coming to her house. John's answer is that he does not know where else to go.

John wanted to know about her condition, actually her life with her husband. But as long as he is in the house, he did not see her husband was coming up.

3.1.4. Personality and Social Crisis

Mindful of the political and economic upheavals of the 1930s, Allport remained wary of any formulation that appeared to minimize personal freedom and individual distinctiveness. In his mind, the brutality of fascism and the inhumanity of the Depression pointed to the need to reaffirm the emancipation of the individual and the incalculable value of each person. It was with these concerns in mind that Allport published what is arguably his most famous book, Personality: A Psychological Interpret~tion.~A'n artful combination of scientific ambition and antimodernist angst, the book boldly asserted the themes of personal freedom, transcendence, and uniqueness that Allport had been stressing since the early 1920s.

HAMM: In my house.

(Pause. With prophetic relish.)

One day you'll be blind like me. You'll be sitting here, a speck in the void, in the dark, forever, like me.

(Pause.)

One day you'll say to yourself, I'm tired, I'll sit down, and you'll go and sit down. Then you'll say, I'm hungry, I'll get up and get something to eat. But you won't get up. You'll say, I shouldn't have sat down, but since I have I'll sit on a little longer, then I'll get up and get something to eat. But you won't get up and you won't get anything to eat.

(Pause.)

You'll look at the wall a while, then you'll say, I'll close my eyes, perhaps have a little sleep, after that I'll feel better, and you'll close them. And when you open them again there'll be no wall any more. (Pause.)

Infinite emptiness will be all around you, all the resurrected dead of all the ages wouldn't fill it, and there you'll be like a little bit of grit in the middle of the steppe.

(Pause.)

Yes, one day you'll know what it is, you'll be like me, except that you won't have anyone with you, because you won't have had pity on anyone and because there won't be anyone left to have pity on you.

(Pause.)

From the quotation above, it is clear that Hamm talks about his condition to Clov, the substantial meaning was tells about his personality and social crisis that happen outside of home. Beside of that the social crisis were happened since he wrote this playwright In the 1950s and 1960s. After World War II, europan's social economic, culture, and politics was falling down and its influence the social or individual welfare and security. Once again Beckett's endgame message is how human understanding just little apart of universe and absurdity of life can be situation or image of social condition form.

In the preface of Personality, Allport was again quick to admit that "personality is fashioned to a large extent through the impact of culture upon the indi~idual. However, he continued to insist that personality could be meaningfully studied apart from specific social contexts.

In the book's preface, he stated that the "interest of psychology is not in the factors shaping personality," but "rather in personality itself as a developing Allport chose to conclude Personality on a similar note. In a famous passage, he wrote: Thus there are many ways to study man psychologically. Yet to study him most fully is to take him as an individual. He is more than a bundle of habits; more than a citizen of the state, and more than a mere incident in the gigantic movements of mankind. He transcends them all. The individual, striving ever for his own integrity, has existed under many forms of social life-forms as varied as the nomadic, feudal, and capitalistic. He struggles on even under oppression always hoping and planning for a more perfect democracy where the dignity and growth of each personality will be prized above all else.

The layout of Personality was consistent with this notion of a timeless, cultureless spirit or personality. Allport devoted more than 100 pages to an analysis of the "structure of personality." Culture, economics, politics.

3.2. Important awareness as subject by Hamm in Samual Beckett's Endgame play

On one level Endgame is challenging our expectations concerning drama. Steven Connor points to the play's subversion of the familiar: the refusal to allow the audience to bring into play their cultural memories of what drama 'should be,' or to use such memories to 'place the action':

3.2.1 Jean Paul-Sartre Existentailsm

Again it is as if the father is more important than his 'creature'; the refusal to listen, in both circumstances, is resonant of a denial of his son's existence. Hamm needs witnesses; without an audience a narrator may as well be silent; without those who will obey a tyrant has no power. Nagg also tells a story, his joke about the tailor, and is emphatic about his audience's (Nell's) enjoyment of the story in the past. Nell doesn't listen to the story, and Nagg is forced to laugh at it alone, and this nullifies the power of his narrative, just as Nagg's apparent refusal to listen attempts to with Hamm's story.

Hamm's father tells him a story of when he was the powerful one, and treated his son without pity.

HAMM (anguished): What's happening, what's happening?

CLOV: Something is taking its course.

(Pause.)

HAMM: All right, be off.

(He leans back in his chair, remains motionless. Clov does not move, heaves a great groaning sigh. Hamm sits up.)

I thought I told you to be off.

CLOV: I'm trying.

(He goes to the door, halts.)

Ever since I was whelped.

(Exit Clov.)

From quotation above Hamm wants to Clov for leave him, this situation describe about Hamm's role as the master of Clov who immobilized and have self-awareness that relize Clov's condition as his servant absolutely uncomfortable if always service the blind and immobilized master. With all the weakness and illness Clov still loyal to service, although since long time Clov wants to leave Hamm because the normal human will think of leaving.

But to view Sartre's phenomenology of freedom as nothing more than a function of the French Resistance, which is then dropped in his move to Marxism, is to fail to appreciate that the notion of a free subject, which is the impetus for all projects of social resistance, depends on the phenomenological, or first person, standpoint, which is the condition of its possibility. There is no question but that Sartre continues to adhere to this position in his later works, and, indeed, it is this adherence to the phenomenological standpoint that fundamentally separates his theory of history from Foucault's. (9)

The possibility if Clov leave Hamm is more big than survive with his immobilized and blind master, there is no reasoning Clov can't leave his master, Clov said he was trying ever since he was whelped. This condition describe how about human dislike or like with the others in essence there is no escape way, with the Hamm's awareness as subject once again Beckett send a message to the reader and audience in Endgame's performed.

3.2.2. Jacques Lacan Psychoanalysis

There are many reasons why Endgame avoids specificity of time and place. It gives the play an openness which can never be closed, once and for all. 'There is no more ...' and yet there is always more: interpretation can never end this game. One of the effects of the play is, as Schwab contends, 'to make the audience conscious of how it projects meaning' (96). I have been very conscious of my own projection of meaning in writing this. I have suggested a reading of the play which proposes that Beckett has placed in an abstract and unreal setting, starkly and simply, the basic constituents of the grand narrative of power in the world: he who has has power; those who want have not. He who has power creates the world in his own image; the powerless collude. That there are other, and far more convincing readings I am pleased to allow. That there is one, overiding interpretation of this play, I will not. This is true of all good drama, I'll grant you, but is even more the case with Beckett's work - and this is surely its abiding magic.

HAMM: Stop!

(Clov stops chair close to back wall. Hamm lays his hand against wall.)

Old wall!

(Pause.)

Beyond is the... other hell.

(Pause. Violently.)

Closer! Closer! Up against!

CLOV: Take away your hand.

(Hamm withdraws his hand. Clov rams chair against wall.)

There!

(Hamm leans towards wall, applies his ear to it.)

HAMM: Do you hear?

(He strikes the wall with his knuckles.)

Do you hear? Hollow bricks!

(He strikes again.)

All that's hollow!

(Pause. He straightens up. Violently.)

That's enough. Back!

Lacan argues that the subject is "the subject of the signifier." One meaning of this claim at least is that there is no subject proper that is not a speaking subject, who has been subject to castration and the law of the father. The distinction between the subject of the enunciation and the subject of the enunciated follows from Lacan's understanding of what "speech-act" theorists like Austin or John Searle would call the "performative dimension" to language. Speech-act theorists emphasise that the words of given speech-acts are never enunciated in a vacuum. They are always uttered in a certain context, between language speakers.

The beginning is start from Hamm Statement which beyond is the other hell, the word hell is signifier which signified meaning the other problem, suffering, and badness. The symbol is old wall which reflection of Hamm's inner space even social, culture, economic, and politics condition. Old wall was holding hostage of Hamm's life but he wants to closer and check it.

3.2.2.1. Identity, or the Subject-as-Meaning

The subject is the consequence of the fact that there is a signifier. And [...] the birth of the subject holds good [se tient] only insofar as it can be thought of as excluded from the signifier that determines it. (IX, 2/5/62)

The relationship between the sign formed from the conversation and action by Hamm and Clov resulted in the presence of the subject, as well as the meaning of the property symbol in use as well as how the identity was formed.

The awareness of the subject undertaken by Hamm departs from the inferences of the situation which if in the same equated with the pattern of chess game. Among the values that can be learned in a game of chess is to be careful because each step to be taken will have logical consequences found. How a subject has both metonymic and metaphoric characteristics, the metonymic characteristic is hell which the word hell that replaces the meaning of other prisoners and the character of the metaphor is a wall of perforated and the act of hitting the wall in the meaning of Beckett as the author of the deep reflection efforts are done in depth will find the point of deficiency and the root of the problem faced that is pagmatically called a blemish in life.

Identity, according to Lacan, always involves being desired by others: more specifically, our identities are what enable us to think we are desirable. According to Lacan, "The subject is born in so far as the signifier emerges in the field of the Other" (XI, 223/198).

While the identity is born with the desire that is involved from others it is shown from the words Hamm who told Clov to approach the old wall, in a more specific meaning related to how our identity allows us to think that we are in demand can be seen from the response that is done Clov to bring Ears to the wall even though Hamm has tried to block him, this is what Hamm's identity always wanted to know by Clov. And the importance of understanding the consciousness of identity in particular by the subject is the fundamental feeling that makes the human mind have always been desired by others. Then as long as the desire for others is there, then that's where the identity of the subject is still there.

3.2.3. Social in the Individual

The fact that society and social condition was born by individual design, the subject or individual behavior influence society pattern and it as reflection of the human's culture. Durkheim also stressed that society is more than just the sum of all its parts. In his book "Division of Work in Society," Durkheim examines how social order is maintained in various forms of society he focuses on the division of labor and examines how it differs in traditional societies and modern societies. Beckett wants to show the awareness as subject by Hamm in Endgame playwright in essence act of Hamm.

HAMM: Look at the earth.

CLOV: I've looked.

HAMM: With the glass?

CLOV: No need of the glass.

HAMM: Look at it with the glass.

CLOV: I'll go and get the glass.

(Exit Clov.)

HAMM: No need of the glass!

(Enter Clov with telescope.)

```
CLOV: I'm back again, with the glass.
(He goes to window right, looks up at it.)
I need the steps.
HAMM: Why? Have you shrunk?
(Exit Clov with telescope.)
I don't like that, I don't like that.
(Enter Clov with ladder, but without telescope.)
CLOV: I'm back again, with the steps.
(He sets down ladder under window right, gets up on it, realizes he has not the telescope, gets down.)
I need the glass.
(He goes towards door.)
HAMM (violently): But you have the glass!
CLOV (halting, violently): No, I haven't the glass!
(Exit Clov.)
HAMM: This is deadly.
(Enter Clov with the telescope. He goes towards ladder.)
CLOV: Things are livening up.
(He gets up on ladder, raises the telescope, lets it fall.)
I did it on purpose.
(He gets down, picks up the telescope, turns it on auditorium.)
I see... a multitude... in transports... of joy.
(Pause. He lowers telescope, looks at it.)
That's what I call a magnifier.
```

(He turns toward Hamm.)

Well? Don't we laugh?

From the quotation above there are symbols social psychology in the reality when Beckett was wrote it. In chaos situation Beckett describe Hamm's awareness ordered to Clov for looking the earth, the earth means that reflection's social condition after World War II, Hamm wants Clov to relize and have whole understanding by the glass. The glass has a meaning investigate as detail as can, in normal life glass's function is use for see the object clearly. The individual is then said to be an individual if his characteristic behavior is projected in a social environment called society.

The relationship of the individual with society lies in mutual uphold human rights and responsibilities as individuals and human beings as social creatures. Where are the rights of the individual and community rights should be determined by putting the public's right of individual rights. Teamwork is the right of people, while recreation with family, entertainment, shopping is an individual right that should give priority to the rights of the community.

Hamm's awareness as subject who get conclusion after understanding the situation around him, while Hamm is blind but wants to Clov learn more about the earth by using glass. Hamm re-emphasize Clov how important glass but in the end Clov said that he have not the glass. Then Hamm said deadly to Clov, the difficult thing if human don't ever review themselves in daily life, allienation will come to human's life because there is no power of subject's awareness.

3.2.4. Personality and Social Crisis

Stagner was well aware of Allport's political progressivism and "alert interest in social problems," but his familiarity with Allport's politics made the "transcendent personality" all the more confusing. "Certainly he could have gotten evidence," Stagner argued, "and to spare, of the effects of culture disorganization upon stability of personal values and attitude.

A tireless researcher, Allport could have easily obtained the evidence to establish a link between culture and personality. At issue for Allport was not the availability of evidence, but the importance of the ideal he was defending: "real individuality."

HAMM: Give me the dog.

CLOV (looking): Quiet!

HAMM (angrily): Give me the dog!

(Clov drops the telescope, clasps his hands to his head. Pause. He gets down precipitately, looks for the dog, sees it, picks it up, hastens towards Hamm and strikes him violently on the head with the dog.)

CLOV: There's your dog for you.

(The dog falls to the ground. Pause.)

HAMM: He hit me!

CLOV: You drive me mad, I'm mad!

HAMM: If you must hit me, hit me with the axe.

(Pause.)

Or with the gaff, hit me with the gaff. Not with the dog. With the gaff.

Or with the axe.

(Clov picks up the dog and gives it to Hamm who takes it in his arms.)

CLOV (impatiently): Let's stop playing!

HAMM: Never!

(Pause.)

Put me in my coffin.

CLOV: There are no more coffins.

HAMM: Then let it end!

(Clov goes towards ladder.)

With a bang!

(Clov gets up on ladder, gets down again, looks for telescope, sees it, picks it up, gets up on ladder, raises telescope.)

Of darkness! And me? Did anyone ever have pity on me?

From the quotation above the chaos and brutal situation was shown by

Hamm and Clov which shows there is a very heavy depressive attitude, at a time when Clov was using a telescope to see further conditions in this regard are social, economic, cultural, and political conditions of society. And then Clov gave Hamm's dog puppets, but Hamm responded with anger and it made Clov think crazy. Foucault's madness and civilization; The efforts made by an institution of confinement, eventually turned into a mental hospital (birth of clinic). These psychiatric hospitals are established in several places with the following objectives:

- 1. Confining people who are unable to work by reason of physical limitations.
- 2. Confining people who cannot work on the grounds of non-physical limitations.

Clov chose not to be involved in the game, but Hamm rejected Clov's request. Although it is already in the final game phase how suffering the subject will not get out of the game and must play it to completion.

Given the political and economic turmoil of the 1930s, Allport Stay alert to any formulations that seem to minimize personal freedom and its own peculiarities. In his mind, the brutality of fascism and the inhumanity of Depression points to the need to reaffirm emancipation of individuals and the innumerable value of each person. The consciousness of the subject shown by Hamm was when his attitude and dialogue even told Clov to hit him with various objects. Being already in the condition of the saturation point around him where the hot social turmoil of the time. In the Personality Introduction, Allport returned quickly to acknowledge that "personality is largely determined by its impact culture on the individual and Individuals, who are fighting for their own integrity, have existed under many different forms of social life such as nomadic, feudal, and capitalistic. He fought even under persecution always hoping and planning a more perfect democracy in which her dignity and the growth of each personality will be rewarded above all else. Psychologists make a sharp separation between individuals and society so cannot see someone "In its true light as a social and cultural being."

CHAPTER 4

CONCLUSION

The result of this study shows that blind and immovable Hamm and Clov as their maid, they present the bitter phase of the final game of life, there is a great narrative behind the absurdity that is served. With this drama script once again Beckett peeling from the bitter and torturing side of life but there is a joke dynamics in it. On the other side the importance of understanding the consciousness of identity to become whole human by gradually exploring the meaning behind life which in essence is absurd.

The play, written in 1957 in French and first performed in the same year at the Royal Court Theater, London in the original, recorded the odd moments of the day. The moments involved four people, Hamm and his aide, Clov and parents Hamm, Nagg and Nell. Under their conditions and limitations, they interdepend, interact, share love and hate, overcome emptiness, loneliness and unhappiness.

Hamm with his 'power' asked the people around him to be willing to listen to his story, with the lure of chocolate candy. The bored Clov always wanted to leave Hamm and always get angry. While Nagg and Nell boast about their beautiful past. It was a bitter joke that occasionally laughed at herself.

The endgame is a one-act play about ludicrous unhappiness, of an endless game; when the desire to end the game appears at the beginning of the story and at the end of another new story will begin. About four disabled people in a family.

Hamm is blind and can not stand; Clov, Hamm's maid, could not sit; Nagg and Nell, Hamm's father and mother, both of them are not legged and live in trash cans. Because of that limitation they are interdependent, fighting between emptiness and loneliness, trying to value the futile.

Endgame is a play that does not present the story, but a series of events and situations. Events and situations are close to us, while reality is often incomprehensible and oppressive. Humans must create and play beliefs, hopes, fictions and other narratives, so that life can still continue and be accounted for whatever it is.

Besides that, there are endgame is the term used in chess to describe the point in a match when the outcome is inevitable. One player is guaranteed victory after a certain number of moves. Beckett uses this as a metaphor for life; regardless of the moves one makes, the end is inevitable from the start.

Other imagery from chess include that Nagg and Nell are very pale/white while Hamm and Clov are very "red-faced". Like the king in chess, Hamm is the most powerful piece on the board but also the most vulnerable since he has limited mobility. Hamm also says, "Me to play," a saying that chess players use to indicate it is their turn to move Clov, Nag, and Nell can only move according to Hamm's orders.

REFERENCES

- Shainburg, Lawrence. (2000). "Exorcising Beckett." The Paris Review: Playwrights at Work. New York: Modern Library
- Cavell, Stanley. (1969) "Ending the Waiting Game: A Reading of Beckett's *Endgame." Must we mean what we say? Cambridge: Cambridge University Press

- Warnock, Mary. (2003) Introduction to Being and Nothingness: An Essay on Phenomenological Ontology. Routledge Classics
- Jean-Paul Sartre, (1946) L'existentialisme est un Humanisme, Éditions Nagel, Paris.
- Jean-Paul Sartre, (2007) Existentialism Is a Humanism (translated by Carol Macomber, introduction by Annie Cohen-Solal, notes and preface by Arlette Elkaïm-Sartre), Yale University Press, New Haven
- Felluga, Dino. (2010) Introduction to Jacques Lacan, Module on the Structure of the Psyche." College of Liberal Arts: Purdue University
- Psychoanalysis. (2002) " Ecrits: a Selection. New York.
- Lacan, Jacques, and Bruce Fink (2002) the Subversion of the Subject and the Dialectics of Desire." Ecrits: a Selection.
- Durkheim, Emile. (1972). Selected Writings. Giddens, Anthony, ed. New York,:

 Cambridge University Press.
- Durkheim, Emile. (1984). The Division of Labor in Society. New York, NY: The Free Press.

- Edwards, J. A.; Weary, G. (1993). "Depression and the impression-forming continuum: Piecemeal processing despite the availability of category information.". Journal of Personality and Social Psychology
- Hansen, R. D.; Hansen, C. H. (1988). "Repression of emotionally tagged memories: The architecture of less complex emotions.". Journal of Personality and Social Psychology
- Braker, Mark. 124 Roberts Place, Ithaca, New York 14850. First published 1993 by Cornell University Press.
- Lacan, Jacques. "Desire and the Interpretation of Desire in Hamlet." In Literature and Psychoanalysis, ed. Shoshana Felman, 11-52. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press, 1982. Ecrits. Paris: Seuil, 1966.
- Ecrits: A Selection. Translated by Alan Sheridan. New York: Norton, 1977.
- The Four Fundamental Concepts of Psychoanalysis. Edited by Jacques-Alain

 Miller. Translated by Alan Sheridan. New York: Norton, 1977. [Seminar XI] Methodology of personality measurement, 91-92, 157 and Allport's contradictions, 224
- Brandinger, Patrick. Crusoe's Footprints: Cultural Studies in Britain and America. New York: Roudedge, 1990.